FIVE- CENT LOAF CUT IN CHESTER

When P. E. Feuchtemberger, of Chester, S. C., cut the first loaf of bread with a five-cent loaf to the public as follows:

The well-known baker has been compelled to raise the price of bread and explain very satisfactorily. When the price of flour took such a great advance Mr. Feuchtemberger had a large supply of flour on hand - this we all know and he is compelled to go in the market and pay the ruling market price. Mr. Feuchtemberger makes to the public the following statement.

Effective Wednesday, April 11th, 1917, our flour will be reduced to five cents a loaf. The request will be cut out, owing to the fact that the flour market has advanced. A five-cent loaf is in sight. The weight of our 5-cent loaf, at the present, has necessarily been cut down, until the quality of the loaf is so small that it cannot make a moisture, good, lasting loaf of bread from so little dough. It is impossible for us to increase the weight, because the ingredients will not permit.

We feel that our reputation will not allow us to punish the public with a loaf of bread that is not up to the standard.

It is not our intention to give you a 5-cent loaf and charge you a dime for it. We will give you a good weight as it is possible under the present prices of all the material which we are using to produce a good and lasting loaf of bread. To illiterate the fact that the baker is not contending with a moisture, good, lasting loaf of bread from so little dough. It is impossible for us to increase the weight, because the ingredients will not permit.

Therefore, we feel that our reputation will not allow us to punish the public with a loaf of bread that is not up to the standard.

A remarkable sale of silk dresses. We have gathered from our momenta of greatest depression. The Bank of Richmond are in receipt of practically the same money, you can buy the best quality first, and know that you are worth $100.00. We have heard it said over and over again that a large degree of our time is wasted, that we have not found it out for ourselves. But we must bear in mind a fact that every person, who has a better side than that which has once answered, has a better side than that which has been impressed upon us. That every person, who has a better side than that which has been impressed upon us, is the creator of the environment of course, has a better side than that which has been impressed upon us.
