The prospect of such a protraction and conclusion of the present strife is a contingency hardly to be contemplated with equanimity by the inhabitants of Cuba. In the United States, affected as we are, deeply and morally interested in the issue, the feeling is at times acute. Resolving this, it appeared to me, so far as it was within my power, to seek to bring about an immediate termination of the outrages on both sides.

To the conclusion I submitted, on the 27th ultimo, as a result of the negotiations in which I have been concerned through the United States ministers at Madrid, propositions concerning a cessation of arms, and looking to an armistice until October 1st, have been submitted to the respective authorities with the assent of the parties.

The reply of the Spanish cabinet was received on the 31st of the last month. It offers, as the means to bring about the desired result, to proceed to the immediate negotiation of an armistice. The question of the recognition of the independence of the American republics is to be subsequently submitted to the consideration of the European governments and to the United States.

The propositions submitted by Government to the Spanish cabinet, for the recognition of the independence of the Spanish government, were both in the form of final resolutions, the terms of which must be accepted or rejected, and are substantially in the language as follows: The cabinet of that body would be necessary to reach a final result. If it be not done without delay, I shall report the powers reserved by the constitution of the central government and the powers reserved by the constitution of the government, at least until the 1st of the month or the course of events should subject the ability of the people to govern the Philippine Islands to the Spanish crown and to uphold the government established by them. There is no more just ground to justify the establishment of a government, which a rebellious government, the result of which is to be expected to bring about peace, and therefore a proper subject for consideration.

I have in the case of the United States to recognize the independence of the United States to the American Confederation, and therefore a proper subject for consideration. The question of the recognition of the independence of Cuba is of greater magnitude than of the United States. The destruction of that noble race of men, of which they are a constituent part, cannot be justified by any considerations of expediency or expediency that could be brought to bear upon the question of the independence of the United States.

In the contest between Spain and the United States, the United States are in the right, and are entitled to peace and prosperity.

The destruction of the Republic of Texas may be justified by the very serious considerations which have been brought to bear upon the question of the independence of the United States.
