STORY OF MANILA.

The Great Battle That Occurred at the First Port of Manila in Realistic Manner.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 7—Among the passengers in the Siberia today, this morning, were several hundred American soldiers, the first to arrive in this city, for this is the first American vessel to reach Manila, and it is the first American vessel to reach the Philippines since the war.

The day of the fight was city and hot. Not a breath of air was noticeable, and the men were greatly tossed by the heat, and the rest and breakfast of the day were of the best. When the men were at breakfast a conference was held by the American commander, and the plan of the attack was discussed.

A few hours later the attack was made known by the commodore. Several shots struck the Olympia, and the enemy's ships were in sight. One shot struck the side of the ship and passed through it, and the captain and nurses were stunned by the concussion.

The crew was ordered to the gun ports, and they opened fire on the Olympia. It was a long and bloody struggle, and the American ships were victorious.

Paymaster Loud, who was on the bridge, saw the first of the American ships strike the Olympia when the battle was over. A few shots were fired, and the American ships were victorious.

Humanity in War.

For the mass of fighting men war is certainly more humane than it was even a generation ago, because the destructive forces employed are now more thorough. The principles of the war machines which were considered of first importance in military art, are now studied. A charge always made against war is that it is a sacrifice of property.
