The Winter Garden

It is useless to say anything about the value of a winter garden because everyone appreciates fully the importance of a supply of fresh vegetables during the winter. There is a number of vegetables that can be had during the winter, but to have them they must be cultivated during the year or purchased instead of being grown at home. The vegetables must be carefully selected and grown under proper conditions. The winter garden is a very useful asset to any household.

Cabbage that is ready for use during the month of November should be planted about the first of November. The plants will be transplanted on the 15th of November and can be ready for use by the middle of December. The plants should be grown in a greenhouse or in a cold frame, and should be well protected from frost and cold winds. The plants should be watered frequently, and should be kept in a cool place. The young plants should be transplanted to the garden in the month of December. The young plants should be transplanted to the garden in the month of December.

Squash planted in early fall will ripen in the fall and provide excellent food. The squash should be planted in a warm, sunny location. The squash should be harvested before the first frost, and should be stored in a cool, dry place. The squash should be cut into small pieces, and should be well boiled before it is served. The squash should be served with a little butter and salt.

For better light, for better sight.

At your desk the light is good, the sight is pleasant. Good light is important to the health of the eyes, and good sight is essential for success. For the sake of the eyes, it is important to have good light. The better light, the better sight.
