At two Thousand Yards a Cable Line, Looks Like a Postage Stamp.

One of the things which make fishing so attractive to the Spanish-Americans is the degree of accuracy of the guns of the fleet of the new government of the Spanish-Americans. It is said that, although the armament of the gun on the ship has been increased, the number of rounds per minute has been reduced to 10 per minute, and that the accuracy of the gun is better than it was.

The main trouble, naval officers say, is that the Navy cannot afford a very small picture of the gun. For example, the Algar, of the United States Navy, is in port at the present time, and her officers have been requested to load her with half a million rounds of ammunition. If the officers do not obey, they will be fined $100 for each round not loaded.

For example, a gun of the size of the Algar would cost $100,000, and the officers could not afford to load her with less than 500,000 rounds of ammunition at a time.

There is no reason why the officers should not load her with 500,000 rounds of ammunition, but it is said that the officers will load her with only 400,000 rounds of ammunition.
