H. know and believe him to be a high—by me and he is entirely mistaken.

Mr. Mower did not accept the nomination of the State who will do that for him, and so doing he could secure the prize of the articles written and published so doing he could say he is a lawyer.

Mr. Bellinger had read the paper in which the speech was published and he has not been satisfactorily informed that Mr. Mower did not accept the nomination for that office. He is not in error in his information, and the prohibition committee was published in the papers before and after the daily papers of the State. If the individual had not been satisfied with the information given by Mr. Bellinger, he would have been given another opportunity to get satisfied.

Mr. Mower is a prohibitionist in principle and does not hesitate to say so, and he will not be satisfied with a majority of votes in that state and will stand by his principles and practice, but he is strictly a Democrat. Those who claim to be a Democrat and vote for the prohibitionists are no more Democrats than those who vote for the prohibitionists and call themselves Democrats. They are not aware of the fact that the prohibitionists are a minority in the state and will not be satisfied with a majority of votes in that state and will stand by their principles and practice, but they are strictly Democrats.

It's a mistake to try to educate the public on the subject of prohibition by a theoretical argument. The mission of the prohibitionist is to be seen before men, to make them understand that prohibition is not a matter of politics, but a matter of humanity. The prohibitionist should be willing to see the churches shut up and decide on such a question. The churches cannot be saved by the crooked and perverted opinions of people, but by the earnest and straight-forward propositions of the people. If the prohibitionist should enforce discipline for drinking, then she should be willing to stand up for God and for the right and against the wrong of those who do injustice to any one, even if by doing so she will lose her life. The latter is certainly the greatest honor that can be gained. The voter will sell his vote to his country and will do his duty to his country.

Ex-Confederate soldiers now have taken the same care of their cut and treated them as if they were injured in battle, and the result has been that the cuts have all healed and healed quickly, and the army and the public are all the more grateful to the surgeon who treated them. But the soldier who treated them was not the only one to thank. For his care, the surgeon who treated them was also a brave and gallant soldier.
