TRICKS OF ALL TRADES

F. de B. F. F. and the Teasels, Explained.

"There are tricks of all trades," said the veteran tailor, as he set to work a new coat. "And the trade of the clothiers is no exception. An ordinary clothier can do more than that seen on the street. It takes just the same kind of skill to make a coat as it does to make a suit."

"The tailor's trick of the trade is to make the coat fit," said the tailor, as he pulled the coat over the mannequin. "But the real trick is to make the coat last."

The tailor then proceeded to explain how he made the coat. He cut the cloth, sewed the seams, and finally tried on the coat to make sure it was the right size. The customer was pleased with the newly made coat and the tailor was satisfied with his work.

"The only trick I need to remember," said the tailor, "is to always give my customers the best service."

The tailor then went on to explain how he went about his work. He started by measuring the customer, then he would make a pattern and cut the cloth. He then sewed the seams and tried on the coat to make sure it was the right size. The customer was pleased with the newly made coat and the tailor was satisfied with his work.
