FOREWORD

We are real or an imitation? Each of us is an imitator to imitate. We see what someone else has said or done and right at once in our minds we say to ourselves—"we idea that the other fellow has created may be seen in various ways. How do you know that the other fellow's idea is not just an imitation of something somebody else has seen before?" The idea of imitation is very important in the study of psychology, for it is a way in which we learn and grow. It is a way in which we develop our own ideas and ways of thinking. If we are to be effective in our work and in our relationships, we must be able to recognize imitation and to understand its role in our own thinking. The study of imitation is also important in the study of creativity, for it helps us to understand how people develop new ideas and new ways of thinking. For these reasons, the study of imitation is a very important part of the psychology curriculum. It is a part of the curriculum that we should all be aware of and that we should all be able to understand.
