April 2014

Khalil

Aubrie Salzman
Khalil
who knew no anchor
but anchored me and
angered me
who touched my face
feeling truths behind my eyes.
I tried and he dried my sweat.

Khalil
who cups his hands
cupped palms together
(Khalil)
who eased his way past
easy turns
eating
mangos, seeds,
and flowers off the trees.

Khalil
who mastered peace
at the age of eleven
who mulls his breath
before breathing.
who pours his skin, dips in a toe,
deems it too hopeful.

Khalil who knotted his arms to lift his chin
at a generation of lost generosity.
forever fascinated and unfamiliar nodded in smoke clouds of curiosity.
and with knots in his hair climbs calmly in the flies, burning his hands and his eyes on his crimes but by then he is Khalil who is God's friend (but who is God's friend?).
He is Khalil,
all tension and touch
telling me to meld into

Reflect
Aubrie Salzman

Reflect
Alexis Howard
Digital Photography