Mr. Whittington held a master class at the Institute of Musical Art. Later she became one of his students. At first she believed his interest in her to be just a flattery, but one day he discovered her ability, and realized that she was his ideal pupil. She was such a good pupil that he could not help but be enchanted by her. He declared enthusiasticaly, "she is the perfect pupil." Therefore, in order to keep her, he married her.

But she has been more than a pupil to Mr. Whittington. She has been his inspiration, his guide, his friend. She has proved a valuable partner to him. With no one else would he have been able to do the work for which he has been so highly esteemed. His songs have been inspired by her. She is his "Lillywhale." With her beautiful voice, her stirring appearance, and her sympathetic understand- ing, Whittington has found in her a valuable partner.

If she will, it is possible that Mr. Whittington may be able to find another pupil like her. If she will agree to have her taught by him. In New York he was able to give her more opportunities. To no one else could she be so important a partner of his present pupil.
