Association

Patrick Bryant
Association | Patrick Bryant
Editor-in-Chief’s Choice

remember

used human-oiled textile smell — animalscent of sweat of grease of man—backseat ‘93 plymouth, gray, looking up’n at’em out the window: 9 old years the sun ... not the sun the kid looking at... warmth above the skin of his temple set upon, glowing haze from/through, the windowpane staring off boredom at play of sun and powerline, now orbish miracle on black bough, now n/ever-ending serpent — ouroboros whipping through fire and forth back and over green-brown blur of trees the highway seeking out its tail, its gape a yawning stretch of midday into a midsummer night’s camp site snap back

noonish sun’s photons’ movement of brightness on brightness laced ‘round black cable to sink upon gravel lot split by shadow — powerline veil cast upon rocks’ eaves’ shadows’ darkness slipping on darkness like a cloak or lover’s arms or image around the self tossed/tossing among sheets in frenzied lowgravity haze by lamplight

remember

firelight roaring like old country road sighing-pining for tired wind’s droning passage over and through engined metal vessel—staring fixated on embered ashes ... not the fire reflecting upon itself ... the kid hypnotized by gray soft-fractured orange-red glow boiling its own image lifted limply out from flooding deep-sea forest darkness—shyly but immanently unhinging its jaws to swallow them all: the voices strangely singing there’s a hole in the bottom of the sea, there’s a hole, there’s a hole, there’s a hole in the bottom of the

snap back

can’t be that kid again within myself, my self must look without that self no longer myself ... any instant: a shade drawn over a shade drawn over the walls encircling the bed now cradling lovers now spent in exchange for a hope

NOTE: This poem is best understood in its original context. It is part of a digital multimedia project that I created for WRIT 502 (Cyber Rhetoric). The website is: http://bryantp2.wix.com/writ502multimedia